THE NO-GUITAR BLUES

by Gary Soto
Fausto needs money for the guitar of his dreams. Then along comes a dog that eats orange peels. How will the dog fit into Fausto’s plan?

Connect to Your Life
Have you ever tried to convince your parent that you really need extra money? What was the answer? If he or she said no, what did you do?

Key to the Short Story
This story takes place in Fresno, California. The time is probably the 1980s, when the TV show American Bandstand was very popular. This show inspired many teenagers to form rock bands and to dream about becoming famous.

Vocabulary Preview Words to Know
mission turnover secondhand distracted deceitful
Focus

Fausto makes his first attempt to get money for a guitar. Find out what happens.

The moment Fausto saw the group Los Lobos on “American Bandstand,” he knew exactly what he wanted to do with his life—play guitar. His eyes grew large with excitement as Los Lobos ground out a song while teenagers bounced off each other on the crowded dance floor.

He had watched “American Bandstand” for years and had heard Ray Camacho and the Teardrops at Romain Playground, but it had never occurred to him that he too might become a musician. That afternoon Fausto knew his mission in life: to play guitar in his own band; to sweat out his songs and prance around the stage; to make money and dress weird.

Fausto turned off the television set and walked outside, wondering how he could get enough money to buy a guitar. He couldn’t ask his parents because they would just say, “Money doesn’t grow on trees” or “What do you think we are, bankers?” And besides, they hated rock music. They were into the conjunto music of Lydia Mendoza, Flaco Jimenez, and Little Joe and La Familia. And, as Fausto recalled, the last album they bought was The Chipmunks Sing Christmas Favorites.

But what the heck, he’d give it a try. He returned inside and watched his mother make tortillas. He leaned against the kitchen counter, trying to work up the nerve to ask her for a guitar. Finally, he couldn’t hold back any longer.

“Mom,” he said, “I want a guitar for Christmas.”
She looked up from rolling tortillas. "Honey, a guitar costs a lot of money."
"How 'bout for my birthday next year," he tried again.
"I can't promise," she said, turning back to her tortillas, "but we'll see."
Fausto walked back outside with a buttered tortilla.
He knew his mother was right. His father was a warehouseman at Berven Rugs, where he made good money but not enough to buy everything his children wanted. Fausto decided to mow lawns to earn money, and was pushing the mower down the street before he realized it was winter and no one would hire him. He returned the mower and picked up a rake. He hopped onto his sister's bike (his had two flat tires) and rode north to the nicer section of Fresno in search of work.
He went door-to-door, but after three hours he managed to get only one job, and not to rake leaves. He was asked to hurry down to the store to buy a loaf of bread, for which he received a grimy, dirt-caked quarter.

THINK IT THROUGH
Whom does Fausto ask for a guitar? What is the result?

FOCUS
Read to find out how a dog gives Fausto a new idea.

He also got an orange, which he ate sitting at the curb. While he was eating, a dog walked up and sniffed his leg.
Fausto pushed him away and threw an orange peel skyward. The dog caught it and ate it in one gulp. The dog looked at Fausto and wagged his tail for more. Fausto tossed him a slice of orange, and the dog snapped it up and licked his lips.

"How come you like oranges, dog?"

The dog blinked a pair of sad eyes and whined.

"What's the matter? Cat got your tongue?" Fausto laughed at his joke and offered the dog another slice.

At that moment a dim light came on inside Fausto's head. He saw that it was sort of a fancy dog, a terrier or something, with dog tags and a shiny collar. And it looked well fed and healthy. In his neighborhood, the dogs were never licensed, and if they got sick they were placed near the water heater until they got well.

This dog looked like he belonged to rich people. Fausto cleaned his juice-sticky hands on his pants and got to his feet. The light in his head grew brighter. It just might work. He called the dog, patted its muscular back, and bent down to check the license.

"Great," he said. "There's an address."

The dog's name was Roger, which struck Fausto as weird because he'd never heard of a dog with a human name. Dogs should have names like Bomber, Freckles, Queenie, Killer, and Zero.

Fausto planned to take the dog home and collect a reward. He would say he had found Roger near the freeway. That would scare the daylights out of the owners, who would be so happy that they would probably give him a reward. He felt bad about lying, but the dog was loose. And it might even really be lost, because the address was six blocks away.

THINK IT THROUGH

What does Fausto decide to do? How does he seem to feel about his plan?

FOCUS

Read to find out what happens when Fausto meets Roger’s owners.

Fausto stashed the rake and his sister’s bike behind a bush, and, tossing an orange peel every time Roger became distracted, walked the dog to his house. He hesitated on the porch until Roger began to scratch the door with a muddy paw. Fausto had come this far, so he figured he might as well go through with it. He knocked softly. When no one answered, he rang the doorbell. A man in a silky bathrobe and slippers opened the door and seemed confused by the sight of his dog and the boy.

“Sir,” Fausto said, gripping Roger by the collar. “I found your dog by the freeway. His dog license says he lives here.” Fausto looked down at the dog, then up to the man. “He does, doesn’t he?”

The man stared at Fausto a long time before saying in a pleasant voice, “That’s right.” He pulled his robe tighter around him because of the cold and asked Fausto to come in. “So he was by the freeway?”

The No-Guitar Blues 31
“Uh-huh.”

“You bad, snoopy dog,” said the man, wagging his finger. “You probably knocked over some trash cans, too, didn’t you?”

Fausto didn’t say anything. He looked around, amazed by this house with its shiny furniture and a television as large as the front window at home. Warm bread smells filled the air and music full of soft tinkling floated in from another room.

“How do the husband and wife greet Fausto?”

“Helen,” the man called to the kitchen. “We have a visitor.” His wife came into the living room wiping her hands on a dish towel and smiling. “And who have we here?” she asked in one of the softest voices Fausto had ever heard.

“This young man said he found Roger near the freeway.”

Fausto repeated his story to her while staring at a perpetual clock with a bell-shaped glass, the kind his aunt got when she celebrated her twenty-fifth anniversary. The lady frowned and said, wagging a finger at Roger, “Oh, you’re a bad boy.”

“It was very nice of you to bring Roger home,” the man said. “Where do you live?”

“By that vacant lot on Olive,” he said. “You know, by Brownie’s Flower Place.”

The wife looked at her husband, then Fausto. Her eyes twinkled triangles of light as she said, “Well, young man, you’re probably hungry. How about a turnover?”

“What do I have to turn over?” Fausto asked, thinking she was talking about yard work or something like turning trays of dried raisins.
“No, no, dear, it’s a pastry.” She took him by the elbow and guided him to a kitchen that sparkled with copper pans and bright yellow wallpaper. She guided him to the kitchen table and gave him a tall glass of milk and something that looked like an empanada. Steamy waves of heat escaped when he tore it in two. He ate with both eyes on the man and woman who stood arm-in-arm smiling at him. They were strange, he thought. But nice.

“That was good,” he said after he finished the turnover. “Did you make it, ma’am?”

“Yes, I did. Would you like another?”

“No, thank you. I have to go home now.”

As Fausto walked to the door, the man opened his wallet and took out a bill. “This is for you,” he said. “Roger is special to us, almost like a son.”

Fausto looked at the bill and knew he was in trouble. Not with these nice folks or with his parents but with himself. How could he have been so deceitful? The dog wasn’t lost. It was just having a fun Saturday walking around.

“I can’t take that.”

“You have to. You deserve it, believe me,” the man said.

“No, I don’t.”

“Now don’t be silly,” said the lady. She took the bill from her husband and stuffed it into Fausto’s shirt pocket. “You’re a lovely child. Your parents are lucky to have you. Be good. And come see us again, please.”

THINK IT THROUGH

How does Fausto react to Roger’s owners?

FOCUS

Read to see how the reward makes Fausto feel.

Fausto went out, and the lady closed the door.
Fausto clutched the bill through his shirt pocket. He felt like ringing the doorbell and begging them to please take the money back, but he knew they would refuse. He hurried away, and at the end of the block, pulled the bill from his shirt pocket: it was a crisp twenty-dollar bill.

“Oh, man, I shouldn’t have lied,” he said under his breath as he started up the street like a

![zombie](zôr-m’ bê)
one who is almost lifeless

He wanted to run to church for Saturday confession, but it was past four-

![secondhand](sëk’ and hënd’)
adj. used; not new thirty, when confession stopped.

He returned to the bush where he had hidden the rake and his sister’s bike and rode home slowly, not daring to touch the money in his pocket. At home, in the privacy of his room, he examined the twenty-dollar bill. He had never had so much money. It was probably enough to buy a secondhand guitar. But he felt bad, like the time he stole a dollar from the secret fold inside his older brother’s wallet.

Fausto went outside and sat on the fence.

“Yes,” he said. “I can probably get a guitar for twenty. Maybe at a yard sale—things are cheaper.”

His mother called him to dinner.
The next day he dressed for church without anyone telling him. He was going to go to eight o’clock mass.

“I’m going to church, Mom,” he said. His mother was in the kitchen cooking papas and chorizo con huevos. A pile of tortillas lay warm under a dishtowel.

“Oh, I’m so proud of you, Son.” She beamed, turning over the crackling papas.

His older brother, Lawrence, who was at the table reading the funnies, mimicked, “Oh, I’m so proud of you, my son,” under his breath.

At Saint Theresa’s he sat near the front. When Father Jerry began by saying that we are all sinners, Fausto thought he looked right at him. Could he know? Fausto fidgeted with guilt. No, he thought. I only did it yesterday.

Fausto knelt, prayed, and sang. But he couldn’t forget the man and the lady, whose names he didn’t even know, and the empanada they had given him. It had a strange name but tasted really good. He wondered how they got rich. And how that dome clock worked. He had asked his mother once how his aunt’s clock worked. She said it just worked, the way the refrigerator works. It just did.

Fausto caught his mind wandering and tried to concentrate on his sins. He said a Hail Mary and sang, and when the wicker basket came his way, he stuck a hand reluctantly in his pocket and pulled out the twenty-dollar bill. He ironed it between his palms, and dropped it into the basket. The grown-ups stared. Here was a kid dropping twenty dollars in the basket while they gave just three or four dollars.

THINK IT THROUGH

What does Fausto do with the money? Why?
FOCUS
Is Fausto's dream of a guitar over? Read on to see what happens.

There would be a second collection for Saint Vincent de Paul, the lector announced. The wicker baskets again floated in the pews, and this time the adults around him, given a second chance to show their charity, dug deep into their wallets and purses and dropped in fives and tens. This time Fausto tossed in the griny quarter.

Fausto felt better after church. He went home and played football in the front yard with his brother and some neighbor kids. He felt cleared of wrongdoing and was so happy that he played one of his best games of football ever. On one play, he tore his good pants, which he knew he shouldn't have been wearing. For a second, while he examined the hole, he wished he hadn't given the twenty dollars away.

Man, I coulda bought me some Levi's, he thought. He pictured his twenty dollars being spent to buy church candles. He pictured a priest buying an armful of flowers with his money.

Fausto had to forget about getting a guitar. He spent the next day playing soccer in his good pants, which were now his old pants. But that night during dinner, his mother said she remembered seeing an old bass guitarron the last time she cleaned out her father's garage.
“It’s a little dusty,” his mom said, serving his favorite enchiladas, “But I think it works. Grandpa says it works.”

Fausto’s ears perked up. That was the same kind the guy in Los Lobos played. Instead of asking for the guitar, he waited for his mother to offer it to him. And she did, while gathering the dishes from the table.

“No, Mom, I’ll do it,” he said, hugging her. “I’ll do the dishes forever if you want.”

It was the happiest day of his life. No, it was the second-happiest day of his life. The happiest was when his grandfather Lupe placed the guitarrón, which was nearly as huge as a washtub, in his arms.

Fausto ran a thumb down the strings, which vibrated in his throat and chest. It sounded beautiful, deep and eerie. A pumpkin smile widened on his face.

“Oh, [hijo], now you put your fingers like this,” said his grandfather, smelling of tobacco and after shave. He took Fausto’s fingers and placed them on the strings.

Fausto strummed a chord on the guitarrón, and the bass resounded in their chests.

The guitarrón was more complicated than Fausto imagined. But he was confident that after a few more lessons he could start a band that would someday play on “American Bandstand” for the dancing crowds.

THINK IT THROUGH

1. How does Fausto get a guitar?
2. Do you think Fausto was right to give the money to the church? Why or why not?
3. How do you think Fausto is feeling when he offers to wash the dishes forever? Explain.